

Frieze

The Shows You Need to See in New York this July

There's impressive and unexpected art in the city, even during the summer doldrums

BY ORIT GAT

28 JUN 2019

Kiki Kogelnik, Divided Souls, c.1986, sheet vinyl, chromed steel hangers and chromed steel garment rack, 255 x 180 x 50 cm. © Kiki Kogelnik Foundation; courtesy: Kiki Kogelnik Foundation and Mitchell-Innes & Nash, New York

'Kiki Kogelnik'

Mitchell-Innes & Nash

23 May – 29 June

This first presentation by Mitchell-Innes & Nash of Kiki Kogelnik's work at their Chelsea space includes several of the artist's colourful, large-scale paintings of women from the early 1960s and '70s – many of which also feature the circuit boards and wires of the new technology that she found so fascinating. A later sculpture, Divided Souls (c.1986), extends the paintings into real life: female silhouettes cut from vinyl dangle from clothes hangers on a metal garment rack. Evoking the flayed skins of martyred saints, like Michelangelo's depiction of St. Bartholomew in The Last Judgement (1536–41), they're a reminder that, despite its Pop sensibilities, the late Austrian painter's work was always marked by ambivalence.

MITCHELL-INNES & NASH